

"Ethereal yet powerful Naomi Sutherland's voice is out of this world. With her haunting melodies and beautiful lyrics, this is an artist destined to be huge."

Tasha Smith, The New Music Show, Shoreditch Radio

Haunting singer-songwriter Naomi Sutherland exploded onto the scene with the dance single "Let You Go" in 2013. Signed to Sleazy Deep Records, the thing most listeners noted was the sultry texture of the singer's voice. The song received 40,000 hits on Youtube, was played on the radio in Europe and placed on an Ibiza compilation album. Described as "Emotional and intriguing, versatile and powerful, soft and caressing, Naomi's velvety voice is a real woman's voice", by acclaimed vocal coach Michaela Steinhauer, Naomi's musical roots were born in the classical world of choral music at school, before she began exploring the metaphysical, the mystical and the philosophical in her own songwriting.

After settling in Norwich in 2014, she set out to record her debut EP 'Intuition' which was released in the summer of 2016 to massive success. Her first single from the record, Dream Lover, reached the semi-finals of the UK Songwriting Contest with all tracks picked up by BBC Introducing, Shoreditch Radio and Future Radio. She then went on to become a Regional Finalist at Open Mic UK 2016 and a finalist in the East Anglia Music Talent Awards 2017.

Of Anglo-Indian descent, Naomi travelled extensively in her youth, from Holland to India to Canada and the UK, to finally settle in Norwich, a medieval city where she was able to delve deeper into her sound. Drawing on her classical roots, she has been exploring the adjunct between electronic and organic music, using her three-octave range to create a haunting, ethereal brand of alternative-pop.

About to release her third single, Sceptre', in anticipation of her next EP, 'The Element', harps, guitars and tribal beats introduce a move away from electronica as she explores the natural landscape of Norfolk, which tells the story of her travels, and the discovery of her ancestral home.
